

Who's Eventide, and what did they do with Tabitha?

If you've seen the signs going up or you've heard the talk on the street, you're probably wondering what's happened to Tabitha.

Not as much as you might think.

Yes, Tabitha is now Eventide, and a change like that can cause some ripples in a community as close as ours. But you should know that the people you've always counted on are still there, providing the same care Tabitha has provided for 140 years.

It's just that now, there are more ways to expand and improve that care. Together, there are greater resources and capabilities to improve efficiency and strengthen financial systems without sacrificing care or quality—because every investment now serves one organization, not two.

For the last 18 months or so, Eventide and Tabitha have been building a relationship based on shared ideals and common values. Like compassion and kindness. Like integrity and respect. Like faith and family and a philosophy that just might surprise you:

At Eventide, joy doesn't have an age limit.

It's a new way to look at getting older, and as one family of senior care communities and services, Eventide is bringing that perspective to life. To thousands of lives, actually.
